ARCO Absolute Return Fund

Monthly report: March 2019

Take two: carrying on from February, the Australian market completed its best quarterly advance in a decade despite the continued softening of economic data. With fundamental risks rising both at home and abroad, our market hovers at all-time highs. Something has to give!

Fund strategy and outlook

The Fund's objective is to generate consistent absolute returns through a market cycle, in excess of the RBA official cash rate, with an overarching focus on capital preservation.

The Fund recorded a net return of -1.46% for the month.

As in February, the broad strength of the equity market in March remains a key focus, flying as it does in the face of worsening economic data. GDP barely grew in the December quarter, and was in fact negative on a per capita basis. Subsequent NAB surveys of business confidence, trading conditions and profitability have all softened. Of most concern to us is that growth in credit aggregates again slowed, to levels not seen since the early 1990's recession. It's not clear that a supply-induced iron ore price spike can be relied upon for economic performance or budgetary settings, although our Government seems to think so. Despite all this, our market had its best quarterly return in a decade, and like most world markets, has shrugged off any and all risks that caused the December quarter sell-off.

Our strategy aims to generate positive returns irrespective of market direction, and our Fund returns have a very low historic correlation with the equity market. As such, our macroeconomic view is an important input in our bottom up stock selection process. Perhaps this allows us to be a bit more sober when viewing the data and adjusting our forecasts and valuation ranges. The fact is we can clearly see empirical evidence of deteriorating economic statistics flowing through to declining earnings and, consequently, valuations. Yet the market still rallies.

The questions all investors are asking remain: "is the worst over, and will the policy response turn it around?" Markets always look forward, but we believe the margin for error is low for two main reasons. First, many markets are already trading at all-time highs. Secondly, with interest rates at record lows, policymakers just don't have many bullets left. In an economy with downside risks, we seek companies insulated from the domestic consumer at defensible stock valuations. We will increase such investment in correcting markets, while always seeking to sell domestically exposed shares that rise on what we deem misplaced optimism.

Performance review

The Fund's long portfolio was effectively flat during March, with a net positive performance from our battery materials exposure offset by losses on a handful of other stocks. Our patience continued to be rewarded in Nine Entertainment, as February's very credible profit result was further digested. Despite the rise, we remain believers that the shares represent compelling value in a market that looks increasingly expensive.

Our view of the underlying value of rare earths producer Lynas Corp was endorsed by Wesfarmers non-binding, takeover proposal, at a c45% premium. This is a second recent example of a corporate buyer with a vastly different view on valuation and time-frame for the battery materials sector than that held by the public market. We share Lynas' view on the Wesfarmers proposal as to both value and its highly conditional nature ("more a thought bubble than an offer"), and we remain invested – although on a much smaller scale, as we have found the uncertainties in the regulatory and political process in Malaysia difficult to quantify for some time.

The somewhat surprising continuation of the bond rally weighed on the Fund's short portfolio, as bond proxies such as REIT's and infrastructure companies outperformed the market despite some very fundamental business model challenges. In addition, the iron ore price spike saw shares in major miners Rio and BHP continue to rally strongly. We believe the iron ore price is unsustainably high, reflecting a perception of a structural shift, as opposed to our view of a temporary dislocation brought on by Brazilian mine closures.

During the month we took the opportunity of a rally in the Wesfarmers share price to initiate a short position. Comprised primarily of retail exposures (Kmart, Target, Bunnings), we believe the consumer risk has not been appropriately priced with earnings risk skewed to the negative. Moreover, while strategic aspirations in battery materials make every sense to us, we doubt that Wesfarmers' existing investor base will be quite so supportive. In what was a quiet month for portfolio movements, other changes were minor in nature.
